is now before the Senate.

"Undoubtedly, the passage of this bill will mean the simplification of State income taxes," George declared. "The States are bound to feel the pressure of their citizens for simplification in cases where their income taxes are complicated."

George said the Finance Committee would start work on the simplification bill Monday.

He predicted also that the Senate would pass the measure without much change.

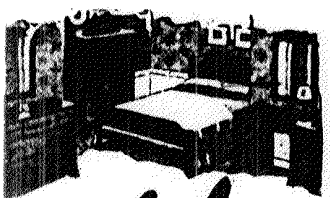

He added that the committee would hear spokesmen for religious, charitable and educational organizations if they wished to appear in protest against the provision in the House bill granting a 10 per cent blanket deduction to persons earning up to $5,000 a year to cover contributions, taxes and so forth. They insist, he declared, that a sharp decline in contributions will be inevitable.
