Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we went on the radio, noting that EPA chief Scott Pruitt is offering his rationale for why the agency is moving to repeal the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan (CPP) before replacing it, arguing the rule is creating ongoing regulatory for coal plants even though it has been stayed by the Supreme Court.

In personnel news, David Harlow, who recently worked with the law firm Hunton & Williams is joining EPA's air office to serve in a role similar to the one held by former senior air office counsel Joe Goffman during the Obama administration.

And our daily news roundup looked at speculation about what might happen to EPA's GHG rule for new power plants given the recent attention on the CPP.
