Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we did some trading, offering early details of the California Legislature's super-majority votes to extend the state's landmark greenhouse gas cap-and-trade program, given the program long-term certainty and protecting against potential future legal challenges.

On the personnel front, Miles Keogh, a former research director at the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, has been tapped to run the National Association of Clean Air Agencies, the state air directors' agency announced.

And in court, a major commercial appliance industry group has asked to intervene in litigation challenging the Department of Energy's delay of several Obama-era appliance energy efficiency standards, suggesting it seeks to protect the department's broad authority to correct errors in the standards before finalization.
