NIXON DEFENDED

Chafee defended the Nixon defense budget on grounds it consumes a smaller percentage of the total budget than its predecessors. He said defense took 65 per cent of the 1953 budget at the end of the Korean War, 47 per cent in 1963 and 43 per cent this year, again in wartime.

He said the federal government was now expected to cope with problems which weren't considered federal problems until recently: mass transit, medicare, higher education, and air and water pollution.

The cost of freedom and of peace has always been high and it is not going to get any lower, Chafee said.
