for him. It was added to the apartment—a bedroom for him What she wanted was companionship—a pleasant, jolly man around. Langford was apparently it.
 Even at that, it was cheaper than some of her previous ventures, the sort a woman gets into through no reason other than misguided loneliness. She had helped some younger men along in the arts—music, the stage, and whatnot. And though encouraging the arts is commendable, it runs into money.
 At least it did with her, as we'll see.
TIRED OF BEING 'TAKEN.'
 So there it was: a woman, lonely, getting tired of shelling out money and being "taken" and now—at least less discontented in a fresh marriage.
 She and her husband were alone that night. It was shortly after 8. She was resting in her bedroom (asthma and asthma trouble), when the dog began to bark.
 Langford went to the door to see what was the trouble. She said he came back and reported that two men, strangers to him, wanted to speak to her. They had mentioned the name of Rafael Diaz, one of those she had befriended. But Diaz, a singer, had been dead for some time.
 So, Mrs. Langford reported, "I wasn't feeling well and asked Albert to send them away."
STRUGGLE, 2 SHOTS.
 Langford dutifully went back to the foyer. Apparently there was a struggle. Also, at least two shots (though Mrs. Langford said she never heard even one). However, she did get up from her bed to see what was what.
 Nothing in the foyer except her husband's bleeding body. Shot.
 No sign of the strangers. She phoned downstairs. The night manager rushed up. Langford was still alive but unconscious.
 Within ten minutes he was dead.
 The first question:
 Had there been two strangers?
 Undoubtedly. The elevator operator took two men up to the seventh floor—both around thirty years, one slender, one heavy.
 How could they have escaped?
