(Associated Press)

The total amount of money in circulation in the United States, amount per capita have about the same since January year at slightly more than capita and a total of more than 700,000,000. The gold stock reserve has remained steady, approximately $4,500,000,000 after having reached a peak of 900,000,000 last year.

Both the amount of money in circulation per capita and the considerably less than during while the reserve stock of gold is proportionately higher than in largely to the continued inflow of gold from abroad. Since last year imports of gold have vastly exceeded exports and this country has about one-half the total world supply.

Reduced circulation has resulted from a general lethargy in smaller credit and currency.
