AMERICAN OCCUPATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

The AMERICAN OCCUPATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION was organized in 1915 as the American Association of Industrial Physicians and Surgeons. Its first annual meeting was held the following year. In 1951 the name was changed to Industrial Medical Association and in 1974 the present name was adopted.

Currently the membership includes approximately 4,200 physicians in the United States, Canada, Latin America, and other parts of the world. Doctors of Medicine and Doctors of Osteopathic Medicine who have an interest in occupational medicine may apply for membership; specialization in this field is not essential. Regionally, the American Occupational Medical Association has 29 Component Societies in the United States. The majority of the Association's members carry their membership through one of the component societies.

The JOURNAL OF OCCUPATIONAL MEDICINE, owned and published by the American Occupational Medical Association, is sent monthly to each member as one of the advantages of membership.

The Association's headquarters office services as a focal point for the Association's activities and through its coordination of information regarding occupational health problems encountered throughout the country, it offers invaluable assistance to members on a host of specific subjects.

The ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING AND CONVENTION is held in the spring. Since 1945, the convention has been held concurrently with the American Association of Occupational Health Nurses, Inc. This combination of meetings is known as the American Occupational Health Conference.

"Will this job make me sick?"

Introducing DEChealth.

A system that helps you answer tough questions.

Employee injury and illness cost American businesses over $22 billion last year. A figure that doesn't include the cost of medical services, worker compensation premiums, fringe benefits, or litigation.

Today, Digital announces DEChealth — a computer-based occupational health surveillance system so comprehensive and flexible it can help you reduce on-the-job health risk for every employee. In any industry.

Running on Digital's powerful VAX computers, DEChealth integrates and cross-references data important to worker health and safety. It can help you track patterns of illness and injury, correlate health problems with exposure to toxic agents, and identify potential hazards. Most important, it can deliver this information to your health care team in timely English-language reports so you can take action.

DEChealth is the only system of its kind sold and supported by a computer manufacturer. Priced at a fraction of the cost you've come to expect, the DEChealth package includes software, customer documentation and instruction, and initial on-site system tailoring. Plus, it's fully supported by our Customer Services organization.

DEChealth. It's the most practical and cost-effective way to address the growing legislative requirements and day-to-day demands placed on occupational health specialists.

And the best answer yet to the most disturbing question you hear on the job.

A total of 100 points shall be required in order to become eligible for Fellowship and these may be accumulated over any period of time.

Purposes and Objectives of the
American Occupational Medical Association

The American Occupational Medical Association is a professional organization for all physicians concerned with the relationship between health and work and the work environment. Its purposes are to further the education and to advance the knowledge and skills of its members. The Association also promotes interest, stimulates research, encourages education, and disseminates information directed toward improvement and conservation of the health of employees. It endeavors to represent the interests of its members in cooperating with industry, labor, government, and other medical organizations on matters pertaining to the health of people who work. The Association seeks to unite into an active and dynamic organization all physicians fully or partially engaged in the practice of occupational medicine and surgery.

In pursuit of these purposes and objectives, individual physicians engaged in the practice of occupational medicine and surgery are encouraged to develop skills and competence to carry out the following characteristic functions of this special field:

1. To aid in the placement of job applicants by ascertaining their physical, mental, and emotional capabilities for work which they can perform with an acceptable degree of efficiency without hazard to themselves or others.
2. To guide and assist all employees in achieving and maintaining optimal health so that they may perform effectively and with satisfaction until retirement.
3. To reduce the incidence, and thereby the cost to both employee and employer, of illnesses and accidents through the development of effective health programs.
4. To provide for the diagnosis and treatment of occupational injuries and illnesses and, where indicated or necessary, of nonoccupational disorders.
5. To promote maximal rehabilitation of all sick and injured employees.
6. To aid in the effective administration of employee benefits concerned with health and disability.
7. To cooperate with those charged with establishing product safety and consumer protection.
8. To cooperate with the health professions and with voluntary and governmental agencies concerned with community health and welfare.
9. To explore, with health planning organizations and the private sector of medical practice, means of integrating occupational medicine into the delivery of total health care.
10. To aid in the assessment of the work and community environment and the control of hazards to health.

Directors — June 9, 1971

CODE OF ETHICAL CONDUCT FOR PHYSICIANS PROVIDING OCCUPATIONAL MEDICAL SERVICES

Adopted by the Board of Directors of the American Occupational Medical Association, July 23, 1976

These principles are intended to aid physicians in maintaining ethical conduct in providing occupational medical service. They are standards to guide physicians in their relationships with the individuals they serve, with employers and workers' representatives, with colleagues in the health professions, and with the public.

Physicians should:

- 1. accord highest priority to the health and safety of the individual in the workplace;*
- 2. practice on a scientific basis with objectivity and integrity;*
- 3. make or endorse only statements which reflect their observations or honest opinion;*
- 4. actively oppose and strive to correct unethical conduct in relation to occupational health service;*
- 5. avoid allowing their medical judgment to be influenced by any conflict of interest;*
- 6. strive conscientiously to become familiar with the medical fitness requirements, the environment and the hazards of the work done by those they serve, and with the health and safety aspects of the products and operations involved;*
- 7. treat as confidential whatever is learned about individuals served, releasing information only when required by law or by over-riding public health considerations, or to other physicians at the request of the individual according to traditional medical ethical practice; and should recognize that employers are entitled to counsel about the medical fitness of individuals in relation to work, but are not entitled to diagnoses or details of a specific nature;*
- 8. strive continually to improve medical knowledge, and should communicate information about health hazards in timely and effective fashion to individuals or groups potentially affected, and make appropriate reports to the scientific community;*
- 9. communicate understandably to those they serve any significant observations about their health, recommending further study, counsel or treatment when indicated;*
- 10. seek consultation concerning the individual or the workplace whenever indicated;*
- 11. cooperate with governmental health personnel and agencies, and foster and maintain sound ethical relationships with other members of the health professions; and*
- 12. avoid solicitation of the use of their services by making claims, offering testimonials, or implying results which may not be achieved, but they may appropriately advise colleagues and others of services available.*
