Friend,

Have you checked out our latest video webinar on America's Energy Security? You can watch the entire discussion below!

Chairman Paul Gosar:

"As China spread Coronavirus around the globe, it showed once again why we cannot allow our economy and our supply chains to depend on China. As we work to recover, we can look for opportunities to build domestic infrastructure and jobs by replacing foreign dependence with domestic development. Building our own domestic manufacturing supply chains will make us more secure and create jobs and opportunity."

Chairman Steve Daines:

"Montana really has it all to help the U.S become energy dominant... With energy independence, we bolster our national security. It is vital that the United States has an energy industry that is robust and can be a backstop when other, less friendly nations play politics on a global scale."

Watch it, like it, share it, and comment! We want to hear from you!

Our honorary co-chairs were joined by Assistant Secretary Steve Winberg, from the office of Fossil Energy at the Department of Energy, and Assistant Secretary Frank Fannon from the Bureau of Energy Resources at the Department of State.

Our webinar focused on the national security implications of remaining energy independent versus becoming reliant on energy imports again from the short and long term futures.

We'd like to recognize some of our Advisory Board Members.
