Also, the CDC (Center for Disease Control) plans to revise their 1978 document entitled "Preventing Lead Poisoning in Young Children." Scientific review meetings are scheduled for February and Dr. Cole has been invited to participate. At present the CDC document states that the upper acceptable blood level in children is 30ug/100g. If the CDC determines that the present level should be lowered, this could have a significant impact in lowering EPA's new ambient standard for lead.
