Q And was Hampshire working in the boiler room while you were working in there?

A They could have been patching the ceiling.

Q Could have been, you are not sure?

A They usually were patching the ceilings. 90 percent of the jobs they actually had holes to fill after the plumbers or sheet metal men or the ironworkers.

There was always patching of holes that the other people would make.

Q All right, so the bulk of the plastering had already been done --

A In the boiler room.

Q In the boiler room, the bulk of the plastering had already been done by the time Wallace & Gale, including you, got there?

A Yes, the bulk.

Q As I remember, the church -- the main body of the church has got the stone block on the inside, too.

I don't remember seeing any plaster in
