that they had agreed to meet again at 11 a.m. today in City Hall.

Asked if he expected the meeting to result in new voting to be held shortly, the conciliator said: "I wish I had a crystal ball."

MEANWHILE, the Restaurant and Tavern Owners' Association held its second meeting of the day in the Casa de Vallejo Hotel to decide, according to W. J. Dykehouse, the Association consultant, the course of action to be followed by the employers in the light of the union action.

In a statement prepared for release after the results of the union vote was made public, Dykehouse said:

"Naturally we feel disappointed in the announcement of [illegible] and especially so in view of the fact that both sides agreed to recommend to accept the agreement reached at the earlier negotiations session.

"We, the Association, met yesterday afternoon and decided to accept the agreement of the union did. Because of the union vote we now withdraw our acceptance.

"It appears that all provisions of the agreement are acceptable to the union except for the problem of the status of union members who crossed picket lines and returned to work. I feel this will be a hard nut to crack."

Dykehouse did not reveal any possible courses of action the Association might take, except to say that the Association committee would participate in the new voting today.

Both sides of the vote agreement amount a return to the "status quo" of the strike as far as the issue was concerned.
