Dear Dr. Drinker:

Our president Mr. Sandford Brown of New York, New York has suggested that we get your advice and suggestions on the following problem.

In the preparation of thermoplastic resins we intend using an appreciable quantity of White Lead Paste which will be handled by the workers who prepare the resins and also as an ingredient by the workers who feed the thermoplastic material into extrusion machines.

Due to the nature both of the paste-like white lead raw material and the thermoplastic resin itself there is, in our opinion, some danger of lead poisoning that may incur to the workers using these materials.

We would greatly appreciate your most competent advice and suggestions as to any precautions which we should take to properly protect the workers in this possible hazardous application of White Lead Paste.

Very truly yours,

NEW ENGLAND TAPE CO., INC.
