CONTEMPORARY STYLE HOME WARM, LIVEABLE

Builder

By A. T. Cassiere, Consulting Engineer

The home pictured this week was designed in contemporary style with the utilization of many modern innovations, but yet it does not have enough of the conventional about it to make it warm and li-

The walls throughout the house are of reinforced precision-made blocks are of different sizes to produce the effect in pattern, mass and shadow desired by the builder.

Low, sweeping roof lines accentuate the rambling farm house effect created by the designer, and interesting shadow effects are obtained through the various roof levels and through the grill pattern at the entry. The grill effect of the vertical wall of the porte cochere is contiguous to the horizontal grill over the entry. High transom windows going

Flowers vs. Shrubs
Flowers and shrubs are of course essential to the landscaping of a home. The are factors which cannot be overlooked.

Quietly the shrub bears the merit of long life. Flowers are colorful and length. Color is a pleasing and appealing and pleasant to the eye. Shrubs are more permanent than the stiffer shrub plants.

The doorless car shelter does not will be said.

The economies of first cost are of course a consideration. True the shrubs cost more initially, and generally present more difficult planting operations. But once established, if the plant has been wisely chosen for its location, it will require only a minimum attention thereafter. On the other hand, to maintain
