Samoa Citizen to Appeal to League

Carrying to the League of Nations a plea for relief for Western Samoa from alleged oppression under the rule of New Zealand, Olaf F. Nelson, wealthy merchant of Apia, British Samoa, arrived in San Francisco yesterday.

En route to Geneva, he came from Sydney on the Matson liner Sierra.

Nelson carries a petition signed by 7,000 adult male Samoan taxpayers asking that Western Samoa be removed from the mandate of New Zealand and mandated directly to Great Britain, with more opportunity for home rule.

South of Market Campaign Sizzles

Never mind about that election they are going to have next November—a successor to Calvin Coolidge or something like that. There's a real campaign on.

Who's going to be the new president of the South of Market Boys?

The momentous matter will be decided by the 2,600 members of the organization next Thursday, and one of the hottest political campaigns the city has ever seen is in full swing.

Two candidates are in the lead—Tom Garrity, seeking election for the fourth time, and Albert S. Samuels, vice-president, seeking elevation to higher honors.

The campaign blossomed into full fruit Saturday night at the entertainment and ball given at the Civic Auditorium, when the Samuels faction took a "straw vote" to determine its strength. The result: Samuels supporters claim, presages a sweeping victory for their candidate. Every wire in the world is being pulled, it is said, and every member of the organization has his shoulder to the wheel.

McSheehy apparently has become an advocate of a plan to follow the general lines of a Rincon Hill-Alameda bridge, except that at a point some 6,000 feet from the San Francisco shore, the bridge would dive into a tube, which would come to the surface on the San Francisco shore.

In defense of his action in taking up the tube-and-bridge plan, McSheehy makes these assertions:

1—That the high-level bridge would cost $100,000,000 and would compel prohibitive tolls to get back the money in a reasonable length of time.

2—That a combination bridge and tube could be built for $38,000,000.

3—That when he was sent to Washington as a member of the bridge delegation his instructions were to submit two bills, and not to change them in any way without permission. He says he has rigidly kept this pledge throughout the hearings on the bills, and did all in his power to further favorable action on them. Then, as a private individual, he subsequently made out this report and merely sounded out various army and navy leaders on the plan.

HAS STUDIED SCHEME.

In his explanation McSheehy adds that up to three months ago he did not know anything about tube construction, and gave it no consideration until the opening of the Holland tubes in New York. Since then, he says, he has made an intensive study of tube construction, and that the hearings before the intersate and foreign commerce committee in Washington were a revelation to him on the matter of tube construction.

"These same revelations, he says, caused "quite a flutter" among some of the engineers, "especially some of those who cannot see anything but a high-level bridge, no matter what the cost might be."

"I had already spoken to some of these gentlemen on the train on our way from San Francisco to Washington, and it almost caused a riot."

McSheehy says he then let the matter drop and presented the case for the high-level bridge, with no internal strife.
