"A thoughtless patron tried to grab the dancer's torch," said Danny Cochrane, manager of the Shamrock Club, in San Francisco, where fire took a toll of four lives, caused serious injuries to eleven others and sent fifty guests in panic to the street by way of the only entrance to the establishment. Many windows of the place were boarded up, police said. Cochrane told authorities an unknown male guest reached for a torch in the hands of a dancer, as though to light a cigarette with it, when it set the draperies afire.
