The released American—Jean Frederick Loba, 39, of Altadena, Calif., served 23 months in Communist jails for helping refugees escape to the West.

A spokesman for the U.S. mission here identified the new prisoner as Roy Jacobs, a 25-year-old student from Detroit. He was arrested in East Berlin last summer, tried secretly on unspecified charges and sentenced to 18 months in prison.

Loba, examined by American doctors Friday and pronounced in good shape, told reporters that he was charged with helping three East Berlin students escape with false passports.

Loba said the three escapes occurred seven or eight months before he was arrested. The Californian admitted he arranged the details of the escape through a "contact" man in what had happened to the contact.

"We suspected he had been arrested, but we had no word," Loba said. "He just disappeared."

Loba said he signed a statement admitting his role in the escapes "because the East German police knew so much beforehand."

Loba, who had been working and studying music in West Berlin, said he was moved to several prisons in East Germany and that conditions were best in jails operated by the Secret Security Service.

Loba complained of gaining weight because of lack of exercise, but said he felt fine.

"I didn't have any work to do in the last six months."

He said he was not mistreated.
