REPORT OF REFEREE ON ORDER
APPROVING COMPROMISE AND RELEASE

The agreement is adequate and will be approved in view of the complex medical and legal issues presented.

The lien of the Department of Employment will be denied inasmuch as it appears from the medical evidence submitted by the Department of Employment that the period of disability for which it made payments relates to a condition not the result of the injury herein.

Re: Greischar, Paul

Dear Dr. Hinshaw:

Studies of elastic recoil of the lungs performed on Mr. Paul Greischar on 11-10-65 were not entirely satisfactory due to lack of patient cooperation. However, since the pulmonary compliance is increased, significant restrictive disease is ruled out; in fact, the increased compliance and small transpulmonary pressure at maximal inspiration suggests that there is loss of "elastic recoil." This is compatible with a clinical diagnosis of obstructive pulmonary emphysema.

Thank you for referring this interesting patient to us.

Sincerely,

Jay A. Nadel, M.D.

COMMENTS:

P/V curves show a low maximal inspiration transpulmonary pressure and a compliance which is increased rather than decreased. The cooperation of the patient left much to be desired, however, The present figures, if valid, indicates emphysema rather than fibrosis.

COMMENTS:

NAME GRISCHAK, Paul
last name (copy)SERIAL # 2715

A 63 year old man who complained of progressive exertional dyspnea for 8 years. He had noticed episodic nocturnal dyspnea for 2 years. He had a productive smokers cough. For 25 years he has been exposed to asbestos. In addition he had been treated for hypertension following a cerebrovascular accident in July, 1964.

Examination: BP - 190/120. Heart - Apex beat 2 cm to left of mid clavicular line. No murmurs. Lungs - No rhonchi. Rales at both bases. Chest x-ray - Increased translucency with bullae at both ~~apices~~ greater than R. Increased linear markings in left mid-zone. Cohn's focus in R.L. zone with hilar calcification.

PULMONARY FUNCTION TESTS:

There is a marked reduction in vital capacity with evidence of air trapping as shown by the increased residual volume and delayed elimination of nitrogen after breathing 100% oxygen. There is a small increase in airways resistance and slight reduction in F.E.V._{1.0}. Physiological dead space was normal at rest, but increased on exercise.

Mild arterial O₂ desaturation was present at rest but oxygen tension improved on exercise indicating some degree of ventilation-perfusion imbalance at rest. The arterial Pco₂ was normal. The diffusing capacity for carbon monoxide was decreased when considered in relation to body surface area but only slightly reduced when predicted on the basis of the lung volume at which the test was done. The patient was exercised at a very low work load because of pain in the right knee. The most notable feature was a rise in respiratory rate and increased dead space ventilation. The ventilatory tests, lung volumes, and blood gases show no significant change from March, 1963.

CONCLUSION:

Restrictive lung disease with reduced diffusing capacity and mild airways obstruction. The results of the function tests are compatible with a diffuse lung disease and do not distinguish asbestosis from the many other causes. The absence of significant airways obstruction suggests that the transradiant areas may be secondary to the diffuse infiltration.

REPORT OF RE-EXAMINATION

Since my last examination in June of this year the patient has had some further difficulty. On July 4th he developed an illness which was subsequently diagnosed as a slight stroke. The patient had a sudden onset of severe weakness of the right leg, weakness of the right side of the face and trouble with his speech. He was hospitalized at Concord Community Hospital. Within a few days his face and speech problems subsided completely. He continued having some weakness in the right leg for a longer period of time; however, after about a month this also cleared up entirely. At the present time he has no symptomatic residuals from this episode. He states he has had considerable difficulty with high blood pressure since this episode. He has been on six different medications for his high blood pressure and he states he has been unable to tolerate any of these because of symptoms of dizziness, insomnia and headache. His left leg at the present time feels warmer than the right leg and he has a sensation like an electric shock going through the left leg.

Insofar as his pulmonary problems are concerned he feels that his shortness of breath is somewhat worse than it was in June, continuing the gradual progression which he has noted previously. He has an occasional morning cough, but nothing of any severity. He has an occasional pain in the left lower chest. At the present time he becomes out of breath on walking about one block on level ground and one short flight of stairs. He becomes out of breath quite promptly if he tries to climb any hill or incline. He worked for 13 days in June. Otherwise he has not done any work since my last examination.

Physical Examination:

Eyes, Ears, Nose, Throat - No abnormalities detected.
Lymph Nodes - No significant enlarged lymph nodes are felt.
Chest - The lungs are clear to percussion and auscultation. There are a few crackling rales heard posteriorly at the left base. The breath sounds are somewhat diminished in intensity.

Physical Examination CONTINUED:

Heart - Not enlarged, rhythm is regular, no murmurs are heard.
Extremities - There is no edema. There is probable early clubbing of the fingers and toes. Reflexes are generally hyperactive, but equal. Babinski sign is negative bilaterally.

X-Ray Examination of the Chest:

There is no significant change when compared with the previous film of June 15, 1965. The x-rays show, as before, changes consistent with pulmonary emphysema and, in addition, a suggestion of fine fibrosis in the middle portion of both lungs, more evident on the left. It is felt that the principal x-ray abnormality is that which would ordinarily be associated with pulmonary emphysema, but that there is evidence of abnormality consistent with asbestosis, although not entirely diagnostic of such.

The patient was again referred to the Cardiovascular Research Institute at the University of California for further pulmonary function studies. Such studies were performed on October 7, 1965. Copies of their report are enclosed. I would disagree to some extent with the interpretation of these results in that in my opinion the figures obtained do show evidence of significant obstructive airway disease consistent with emphysema. Because of this apparent difficulty in interpreting their results, it was felt that a further procedure was indicated, namely what is known as a pressure-volume curve of the lung which is frequently able to distinguish between diseases such as emphysema and diseases of pulmonary fibrosis such as asbestosis. This study was performed on November 11, 1965. A copy of their report and conclusion is enclosed. It is noted that this study demonstrated abnormalities which would be expected to be found in emphysema and did not demonstrate abnormalities which would be expected to be found in a restrictive type of pulmonary abnormality. Asbestosis would be expected to produce a restrictive type of abnormality.

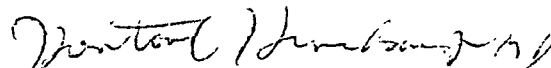

In my opinion these further studies confirm the previous impressions that this patient is suffering mainly from pulmonary emphysema. However, there is a good possibility that he does have some degree of Asbestosis in addition to his pulmonary emphysema. In my opinion, if he does have any Asbestosis it is of a relatively mild degree and that the majority of his shortness of breath and disability is produced by the emphysema and not by the Asbestosis, although there is a possibility that some of his present disability is produced by Asbestosis. Unfortunately I do not know of any way of putting the relative amounts of his

Dear Dr. Hinshaw:

Studies of elastic recoil of the lungs performed on Mr. Paul Greischar on 11-10-65 were not entirely satisfactory due to lack of patient cooperation. However, since the pulmonary compliance is increased, significant restrictive disease is ruled out; in fact, the increased compliance and small transpulmonary pressure at maximal inspiration suggests that there is loss of "elastic recoil." This is compatible with a clinical diagnosis of obstructive pulmonary emphysema.

Thank you for referring this interesting patient to us.

Sincerely,

Jay A. Nadel, M.D.

NAME GREISCHER, Paul
last name (caps)SERIAL # 2715

A 63 year old man who complained of progressive exertional dyspnea for 8 years. He had noticed episodic nocturnal dyspnea for 2 years. He had a productive smokers cough. For 25 years he has been exposed to asbestos. In addition he had been treated for hypertension following a cerebrovascular accident in July, 1964.

Examination: BP - 190/120. Heart - Apex beat 2 cm to left of mid clavicular line. No murmurs. Lungs - No rhonchi. Rales at both bases. Chest x-ray - Increased translucency with bullae at both ~~apices~~ greater than R. Increased linear markings in left mid-zone. Cohn's focus in R.L. zone with hilar calcification.

PULMONARY FUNCTION TESTS:

There is a marked reduction in vital capacity with evidence of air trapping as shown by the increased residual volume and delayed elimination of nitrogen after breathing 100% oxygen. There is a small increase in airways resistance and slight reduction in F.E.V._{1.0}. Physiological dead space was normal at rest, but increased on exercise.

Mild arterial O₂ desaturation was present at rest but oxygen tension improved on exercise indicating some degree of ventilation-perfusion imbalance at rest. The arterial Pco₂ was normal. The diffusing capacity for carbon monoxide was decreased when considered in relation to body surface area but only slightly reduced when predicted on the basis of the lung volume at which the test was done. The patient was exercised at a very low work load because of pain in the right knee. The most notable feature was a rise in respiratory rate and increased dead space ventilation. The ventilatory tests, lung volumes, and blood gases show no significant change from March, 1963.

CONCLUSION:

Restrictive lung disease with reduced diffusing capacity and mild airways obstruction. The results of the function tests are compatible with a diffuse lung disease and do not distinguish asbestosis from the many other causes. The absence of significant airways obstruction suggests that the translucent areas may be secondary to the diffuse infiltration.

REPORT OF RE-EXAMINATION

Since my last examination in June of this year the patient has had some further difficulty. On July 4th he developed an illness which was subsequently diagnosed as a slight stroke. The patient had a sudden onset of severe weakness of the right leg, weakness of the right side of the face and trouble with his speech. He was hospitalized at Concord Community Hospital. Within a few days his face and speech problems subsided completely. He continued having some weakness in the right leg for a longer period of time; however, after about a month this also cleared up entirely. At the present time he has no symptomatic residuals from this episode. He states he has had considerable difficulty with high blood pressure since this episode. He has been on six different medications for his high blood pressure and he states he has been unable to tolerate any of these because of symptoms of dizziness, insomnia and headache. His left leg at the present time feels warmer than the right leg and he has a sensation like an electric shock going through the left leg.

Insofar as his pulmonary problems are concerned he feels that his shortness of breath is somewhat worse than it was in June, continuing the gradual progression which he has noted previously. He has an occasional morning cough, but nothing of any severity. He has an occasional pain in the left lower chest. At the present time he becomes out of breath on walking about one block on level ground and one short flight of stairs. He becomes out of breath quite promptly if he tries to climb any hill or incline. He worked for 13 days in June. Otherwise he has not done any work since my last examination.

Physical Examination:

Eyes, Ears, Nose, Throat - No abnormalities detected.
Lymph Nodes - No significant enlarged lymph nodes are felt.
Chest - The lungs are clear to percussion and auscultation. There are a few crackling rales heard posteriorly at the left base. The breath sounds are somewhat diminished in intensity.
