Dear Frank,

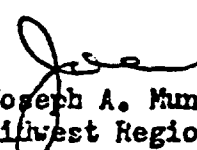

As I promised, I'm enclosing a copy of the part of the Bulletin of the Quebec Asbestos Mining Association. I underlined the parts I quoted to you.

There are more and more items being published that show that perhaps some well publicized people have gone off the deep end in regard to 'environmentally caused' cancers. Many people have confused the word environmental to mean only on the job factors or only air or water pollution. There seems to be a growing body of comment that reveals that the most common, and perhaps most meaningful, environmental factors are such things as smoking, alcohol consumption, and diet. I think that many people have let the 'headline grabbers' do their thinking for them.

Let's hope that the future will bring more independent thinkers and doers. We all need rationality.

Sincerely yours,
