fact, accurate. That is troubling to the Court. That is very troubling.

I think I said if you didn't have any, I took you at your word, write the letter and that would be the end of the matter. And now I find that you did in fact have the very items that were requested, and that is very troubling.

And for your client to take that position with the Court makes the Court think that there ought to perhaps be some sanctions imposed as a result of that misrepresentation, because I think it was very clear what I said, wasn't it?

MR. WILLIAMS: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: If you didn't have them, that is the end of the matter, but now I am finding out you did, in fact, have them and there was a continuing supply of them.

MR. WILLIAMS: Your Honor --

THE COURT: This is serious business, Mr. Williams and Ford better realize that.

MR. WILLIAMS: I think I appreciate it, and
