

To: Jackson, Ryan[jackson.ryan@epa.gov]
From: American Enterprise Institute
Sent: Wed 6/7/2017 10:06:55 AM
Subject: AEI Today: This week's shot to undo the harm of Dodd-Frank

. This week's shot to undo the harm of Dodd-Frank

AEI's daily publication of independent research, insightful analysis, and scholarly debate

AEI

This week's shot to undo the harm of Dodd- Frank

Peter J. Wallison | AEI

The Choice Act, a bill that would repeal or substantially modify large portions of the 2010 Dodd-Frank Act, is on the House floor this week. There are good reasons for every one of the dozens of provisions in the bill, but first it's important to understand two significant things about the ideologically driven Dodd-Frank law: It is primarily responsible for the historically slow recovery of the US economy since 2008, and, most important, it was completely unnecessary.

Twenty20

The ultimate bipartisan compromise for paid family leave

Aparna Mathur and Isabel Sawhill | Time

Last year, a group of bipartisan experts joined forces under the umbrella of AEI and the Brookings Institution to explore paid family leave in the United States. The group, comprised of many people with government experience in both Democratic and Republican administrations, didn't agree on every question, such as how generous benefits should be. But everyone agreed on one key point: A paid family leave policy is needed in America.

Reuters

Republicans, ignore the CBO at your own political peril

James C. Capretta | Real Clear Health

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has been criticized often by both parties since it began issuing cost estimates for legislation in the 1970s. So it was not surprising to hear the Trump administration complain when the agency released an unflattering assessment of the American Health Care Act. The CBO has gotten plenty of things wrong over the years, but you would be hard-pressed to find an agency with more useful feedback on the GOP's path to reform.

Reuters

5 things to watch in tomorrow's British general election

Dalibor Rohac | AEIdeas

Tomorrow, British citizens will vote in a snap election called by UK Prime Minister Theresa

May. When she called the election in April, the decision looked like a masterstroke: The Labour Party was hitting historic lows in the polls, losing constituencies it had dominated since the 1930s. But a month and a half is a long time in politics, and the picture days ahead of the vote looks far less certain — in no small part because of the latest attack in London.

More from AEI

'Financialization' of the US economy may be a problem, but it didn't start with Reaganomics

James Pethokoukis | AEIdeas

Conservatives, let's scrap regulations in favor of a carbon tax

Alex Brill | CNBC

The polls on political correctness: Are young people really turning against free speech?

Karlyn Bowman and Eleanor O'Neil | Forbes

Watch: Ziad Asali offers a Palestinian perspective on the Six-Day War's 50th anniversary

Danielle Pletka | AEI Viewpoint video

A list of what the CBO got wrong about the Republican health bill — and, most important, what it got right

Joseph Antos and James C. Capretta | Health Affairs

Report: Paid family leave is an issue whose time has come

Aparna Mathur, Isabel Sawhill, Angela Rachidi et al. | AEI-Brookings Working Group on Paid Family Leave

. . . On the other hand: The dark side of paid parental leave

James Pethokoukis | The Week

Watch live this morning: Deaths of despair and the opioid crisis

Nicholas Eberstadt and Sally Satel | AEI event today at 10:30 AM ET

AEI's Values & Capitalism project is now accepting applications for the 2017–18 Young Scholar Award

Academic Programs team | AEI

The term 'trade deficit' reflects defective language and deficient thinking. Let's call it a 'stuff surplus.'

Mark J. Perry | AEIdeas

AEI cares about your inbox. Want to tailor your AEI subscriptions? Click here and get content that matters to you.

View online | Ensure delivery | Subscribe

American Enterprise Institute
1789 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20036
P: 202.862.5800 | F: 202.862.7177 | www.aei.org

This message is for: jackson.ryan@epa.gov | Manage preferences | Unsubscribe