

wind while Nelson Stake, manager of the field, was preparing to step into his plane to present a dive bombing exhibition.

A small pasteboard shack out on the field was to be the target. It was loaded with dynamite, which was to be detonated as Stake pulled up out of his mock bomb run. This was to be the big thrill for the spectators.

I looked at my watch. It was 2:40 p.m. I felt a ripple of the

All six vehicles were put out of commission.

That ambulance, a sad and helpless hulk, was still standing there on the field long after all the victims had been carted away in farmers' pickup trucks
