

...taste. Therefore, we prefer to keep them growing through the year for table use. Dehydrator is fine for drying corn, Thompson seedless grapes for raisins, apples and other fruits.

"This year we have seen but two of the little pestiferous diabolous. Several families of young quail go over the garden every day clear to the top of the Kentucky Wonders, tomato vines, etc., and eat every beetle and worm. Perhaps the cooler weather has helped, too..."

Raymond Brisbane's letter is a good example of the kind of report for which I've been asking. Helpful and practical. His idea of keeping vegetables growing through the year for table use is good. Fresh vegetables will always be better than preserved vegetables. However, the summer surplus shouldn't be wasted and properly dehydrated, properly reconstituted vegetables are quite palatable.

H. B.'s mention of quail in the garden is downright amazing—at least to me. Quail have proved a worse pest than insects in some sections, particularly around Stanford and above I. C. in the Berkeley hills. Apparently the quail are doing the job which ducks are supposed to do, and without eating the lettuce, beans and other foods. Even the ducks with which we've experijumped forward, crushing the son's chest.
