Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we looked at the impacts, highlighting a new report finding that air pollution from oil and gas development disproportionately affects African-American communities, conclusions environmentalists hope will help fight Trump administration efforts to undo the Obama EPA's first-time limits on the greenhouse gas methane from new oil and gas drilling.

And our daily news roundup took another look at ongoing international climate talks, where several other countries and domestic climate advocates appear to be breathing a sigh of relief that administration officials are not actively trying to undermine the Paris climate agreement.
