Hi Patty,

Thanks so much for reaching.

Your inquiry below is one that will need to be asked of our HQ office as it is a national issue.

Please send your inquiry to press@epa.gov.

Thanks,
Nahal

Hi Nahal,

I just left you a phone message. I spoke to Brent of the congressional EPA office and he said you would be the correct person to talk to.

This week CBS News This Morning shared a proposed a delay on a federal ban on a potentially deadly chemical found in common paint strippers. The EPA said the chemical poses an "unreasonable risk" and has been implicated in dozens of deaths.

This news coverage has brought significant concerns to consumers who rely on the EPA to provide guidance and safety on these type of commonly used DIY products.

I am covering this topic in the June issue and plan to have this be a feature article. I think it has serious consequences to all consumers.

Please call my cell phone below.
