33,000 Mexicans To Harvest Crops

BERKELEY, Cal., May 12 (UP) More than 33,000 Mexicans will work in California this summer in food processing plants, in harvests and on railroads, William B. Parker, director of the state farm production council, said today.
"Though the imported workers this year will number 6,000 more than last, approximately 13,000 more will be needed to fill the current demand, Parker said.

What is Wendell L. Willkie up to? This speculation is based on several factors:
(1) Willkie is no quitter. His political and business activities from college days are proof of it. Even if he were given to sudden and impetuous changes, it's impossible to conceive of his embarrassing those who have stuck with him for four years by taking himself out of the national political picture.

(2) "Coss" observers here say that there was never any possibility of Willkie's capturing a majority of the Wisconsin delegates and that he was well aware of it.

The conclusion can only be that Willkie has something up his sleeve and had it there before the Wisconsin primary took place.

Willkie hasn't even breathed what that something might be to his most loyal supporters. Observers believe that he won't say anything to tip his hand before the republican convention.

In recent months, Willkie must have concluded his strategy was wrong; that pursuing his mapped political path would get him nowhere that he could do more good for himself and his political beliefs by doing a complete about-face. If that is true, what then is this new strategy?

Observers here in both republican and democratic ranks estimate that Willkie might possibly swing from five to ten million votes by vigorous campaigning for one presidential candidate, in a year when the total votes cast for president may run only 40 to 45 million (about 13 to 15 million under normal) three or four million votes could swing the balance of power.

If Willkie can swing only that much as swinging for a cabinet post, perhaps secretary of state, where his international ideology could be given free rein. Others think he merely wants to be a behind-the-scenes power.

In any event, Willkie's withdrawal boomed Gov. Dewey's stock to an all-time high, which Mr. Dewey well may not like. If Dewey should be nominated in June and defeated in November, it would be a setback to the most meteoric political career this country has seen in years. Willkie's withdrawal also has dashed the hopes of backers of Gov. Bricker and Gen. Douglas MacArthur who were praying for a convention deadlock to bounce their men into the picture.
