FROM LEE DERRICK

I have read in several ~~book~~ books that the resting ECG is not adequate ~~an~~ ~~ade~~ test for heart abnormality.

The doctors say, in order to determine if the heart has problems areas that need attention, they have to see how it performs ~~and~~ under stress. When ~~the~~ the heart is functioning at a high rate of speed, ~~it~~ it ~~or~~ may have difficulties that simply don't show up while you're resting.

A report in the British Heart Journal found 12.3% of a population of 510 men (ages 40-65) showed abnormal exercise ECGs yet had no indication of any problem when their resting ECG was taken. None of these 63 men had noticed any of the other signs of heart disease either. Had they not taken the exercise ECG, none of them would have known that their hearts needed help.

3/5/81 Dr. O'Bryant agrees with letter but it is not feasible to do stress tests here. - Stress tests ~~not~~ indicated in grey person. /D.S.
