

Epoxy Waterproofs

A do-it-yourselfer can hardly have failed to notice the many different brands of epoxy adhesives on dealers' shelves in recent months.

The popularity of the epoxies is due to their strength and durability for certain types of projects. Epoxies are a new class of plastic resin, derived from petroleum. The resin is produced and sold as a molasses-like liquid and must be mixed with a curing or hardening agent just before use.

One of the newest of the epoxies is a waterproof sealant especially made for leaks in basement walls, swimming pools and boat hulls, although it has many other uses. It dries in about ten hours.

One way to find the exact areas on a basement wall where waterproofing is needed is to mark the spots with chalk while they are wet, as during a heavy rain. Then, after the crack or section has dried, the chalk will show you where the sealant is needed. The resin and curing agent are mixed thoroughly, allowed to sit for about 15 minutes and then spread on the surface which needs attention.
