big Aussie factor

CANBERRA, Australia's 60 senators may be a vital factor in this country's politics for years to come.

Australians will elect 32 senators May 9, and the prospect is that the senate then will be split 30-30 between the Liberal and Country party government team and the opposition Labor party. With power so evenly divided, the death or illness of even one senator could upset party control.

Australia's upper house is elected by the proportional representation system.
