Expert Tells Wc

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The 55th annual convention of the Boys' Clubs of America has been told that youth should be given a bigger part in adult affairs.

William H. Riddinger, director of a six-year needs and interests study being conducted by the Boys' Clubs of America in cooperation with the Grant Foundation, revealed his conclusions to more than 1,200 volunteer and professional youth workers in his speech.

He summarized the results of the first of three two-year studies to delegates. His findings were based on polls taken of thousands of Boys' Club volunteers, with special emphasis on the group from 14 to 18.

The 115-page report showed:

1—Boys crave independence from the family and especially want economic self-sufficiency. They want to assume adult responsibilities.

2—Great deal of emphasis is placed on acceptance by friends and equals, indicating the "need for belonging." Boys want conformity, close family ties and membership in similar age-group clubs.

3—Boys seek dependence on others and try to find justified self-esteem, originality, resourcefulness and improved character.

4—Boys share a wealth of interests, including team sports, watching television and listening to records.
