Trumpeter Swan Making Comeback

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)

—The trumpeter swan, once near extinction, is making a comeback, the Department of Interior says.

The department's Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife reports nestings of the big birds in Nebraska and Minnesota this summer. The hatching of a young swan at Carver County Park in Minnesota is the first reported in that state in 100 years, the department said.

In 1932, the number of trumpeter swans in the continental United States was down to 89 and they were found only in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. The department says the trumpeter population now is about 4000, including some in Alaska.

Will Replace Fish

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — A paper industry in southwest Arkansas has agreed to buy $30,000 worth of fish to replace a large number killed when one of the plant's wood-treating ponds overflowed. The overflow killed fish for 40 miles along the Little River.

— More than one way to kill fish!
