Dear Doctor Goodman:-

I am sending you herewith a series of tables, the data of which I hope will be found largely self-explanatory. The tables are an assortment taken from a series of articles which have either been presented at recent scientific meetings or which are in process of preparation for publication. I have gone over them quite critically and no material is included about which there is any question of accuracy.

I can not supply you with the text which has accompanied these data for the reason that it is being revamped and is not now in a proper state for presentation. It will be some weeks before it is ready, but in the meantime I think it will be useful to you to have the data, particularly since these data are of much more importance than anything I shall say in discussion of them.

If there are any questions concerning them which you would like me to answer promptly, do not hesitate to write me. Moreover I should be grateful if you would return to me such of the data as you will not wish to use and if you would also let me know what portion of it you wish to use. For my own convenience in connection with any of the tables about which you may wish to raise questions, I have given them an arbitrary mark of identification.

Cordially yours,

RAK:is
